DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Green Hill house is a Flemish bond brick, two-story structure with a gable roof, modillioned cornice and two interior end chimneys. The central entrance of the five-bay front has double doors with a two row transom. Architrave moldings frame the nine-over-nine sash windows but only a course of rowlock-laid brick serves as the lintel. The rear ell is one story but also has a gable roof with modillioned cornice and the brickwork closely follows the techniques of the main block. Were it not for the obvious break at the connection of the two units one would assume that they both had been built at the same time. The rear ell also has a double door on the east front which is sheltered by a full-length porch supported by rounded brick columns.

The interior is based on a standard central hall plan but not only is there a stair in this hall but also in the east room. The west room has a fully paneled chimney wall with cupboards and glass doors to either side. Pilasters frame the fireplace and support a cornice shelf. The entablature which was around the top of the wall is of an extremely provincial design and includes reeding and a cut-out section in the form of scalloping. The room in the rear ell features a magnificent mantel design on the north wall with three levels of cornice shelf and three-sectioned frieze rising to the ceiling. The cable design is used here in the cornice designs as well as the chair rail.

The numerous outbuildings for the most part are located on two "streets", the first being the approach from the south and the second, the lane running to the east. On this eastern front are located a rather residential looking brick structure, a frame outbuilding with a partially enclosed shed porch in front, a brick duck house, an ice house, a kitchen, a stone laundry and a frame slave quarters. The frame kitchen has a magnificent stone chimney which contains three separate fireplace openings and is eighteen feet wide, the full length of the gable end. The mounting block is also located close to the house on this side. On the south front along the approach are two log barns composed of hewn timbers and the ruins of a rather large stone stable. A few hundred yards to the south east of the main house stands a large tobacco barn, fifty by sixty feet, and a granary, both being composed of stone and wood. Linking this complex of structures together is a network of stone walkways, six feet wide with curbing, most of which remains uncovered.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

The rear ell of Green Hill was probably constructed about 1800 with the front section added soon after. It was built by Samuel Pannill on land in Campbell County north of the Staunton River, the original portion of which he bought in 1797. Pannill was a member of the Virginia General Assembly from Campbell County, on the Board of Public Works, and president of the Roanoke Navigation Company. The Green Hill plantation complex is notable for its fine interior woodwork, especially surprising due to the rather simple exterior design. But the survival of most of the outbuildings, particularly valuable due to the variety of functions represented, is truly amazing.
